ABOUT THIS REPORT

In 2023, Sardinia was the only Italian region where tourism declined. In 2025, ISTAT ranked it first in Italy for tourism growth. This report explains the turnaround with official data: who is travelling to Sardinia, where on the island the growth is happening, and what the 2026 season shows about the future of luxury travel in Sardinia.

It was presented at TRUE Sardegna 2026, the luxury travel trade event held on the Costa Smeralda from September 28 to October 1, 2026.

Every figure in this report is sourced. Sources are listed at the end of each chapter and in full in the final section. The online edition, with linked sources and updates, is at <https://truevent.eu/reports/sardinia/2026>.

FROM LAST TO FIRST: SARDINIA'S TOURISM GROWTH, 2023-2025

The turnaround is recent and fast. In 2023, Sardinia recorded 14.2 million nights according to ISTAT, down 3.4% on 2022: the only region in Italy to decline in a year when the country as a whole beat its pre-pandemic record.

By 2025 the picture had reversed. The regional tourism observatory, which uses the same method year after year, counted 21.9 million nights and more than 5 million arrivals, with an average stay of 4.24 nights. That is +15.9% on 2024 and +34.2% on 2023. ISTAT's final 2025 figures placed Sardinia first in Italy for percentage growth in tourism flows, ahead of Sicily and Puglia.

The international tipping point

Growth came overwhelmingly from abroad. International nights rose 21.5% in 2025 and about 50% in two years, while Italian nights grew by around 10%. For the first time, foreign visitors clearly outnumbered Italians, with 56% of nights against 44%.

A NOTE ON THE NUMBERS

ISTAT began counting short-term rentals only in 2025, which inflates its year-on-year growth for Sardinia (+39% in nights). The regional observatory has always included them, so its +15.9% is the like-for-like figure, and the one used throughout this report.

WHO IS TRAVELLING TO SARDINIA

Germany, France and Switzerland are the backbone of Sardinian tourism, and all three set records in 2025.

Top international markets, 2025

MARKET	NIGHTS 2025	VS 2024	NOTE
Germany	3.26M	+19.8%	No.1 market, first time above 3 million; stays average 4.8 nights
France	1.6M	+21.6%	French nights have more than tripled in ten years
Switzerland	1.04M	-	Above 1 million nights for the first time
United States	400,860	+34%	First market outside Europe
Canada	116,000	+31%	Fastest long-haul growth since 2019

The fastest growth comes from long-haul markets. Compared with 2019, Canada is up 263%, the United States 246%, Australia 166%, New Zealand 158% and India 120%, while China is still 16% below pre-pandemic levels. For luxury travel advisors this matters because long-haul travellers stay longer, book through advisors and travel outside the Italian peak weeks.

THE AMERICAN LUXURY TRAVELLER IN SARDINIA

American travellers are still a small share of Sardinia's total, but no market has grown faster or matters more at the luxury end. In 2025, Sardinia welcomed 121,118 American visitors, who spent 400,860 nights on the island. About half of those nights are spent in Gallura, home of the Costa Smeralda, and US nights there doubled in two years.

- US passengers arriving in Olbia by private jet rose 26% in 2025 (to November) compared with 2024.
- In a 2025 study of superyachts in Gallura, US owners were the largest single group: 72 of the 347 identified superyachts.

Direct flights between New York and Sardinia

On May 21, 2026, Delta launched the first-ever non-stop route between the US and Sardinia, New York JFK to Olbia, four times a week through October. The route carried about 2,700 passengers in its first weeks, with strong demand in business and premium cabins. United adds Newark-Olbia from May 27, 2027, three times a week. From 2027, northern Sardinia will have seven weekly flights to the New York area.

LUXURY TRAVEL IN SARDINIA: THE COSTA SMERALDA AND BEYOND

Luxury tourism is a small slice of volume and a large slice of value. Across Italy, an Altagamma analysis found that 5-star and 5-star luxury hotels account for 1% of hotel businesses and 3% of hotel nights, but generate 25% of tourist spending; their guests spend nine times more than the average visitor.

Five-star hotels in Italy: share of the total

Altagamma analysis. Five-star guests spend nine times more than the average visitor.

The Costa Smeralda is the heart of luxury travel in Sardinia. Gallura holds about 60% of the island's top-tier hotels, and Arzachena, the Costa Smeralda's municipality, ranks first in Sardinia for tourism value despite recording fewer nights than Alghero, with the highest average short-rental revenue at $51,250 per listing a year.

Luxury real estate

Porto Cervo holds Italy's record villa value, at up to €70,000 per square metre. It averages €11,575 per m² and, in the villa segment, now tops Portofino at around €21,000 per m².

Private aviation

Olbia Costa Smeralda airport handled about 15,000 private aviation movements in 2024 (+10%), with more than 220 on peak days. Its operators report that private jet clients increasingly travel beyond the Costa Smeralda to the rest of the island.

Yachting

2,330 yachts and superyachts visited the Costa Smeralda area in summer 2023, 30% more than in 2018. A 90-metre superyacht spends around €40,300 a day on shore.

GROWTH ACROSS THE WHOLE ISLAND

Every Sardinian province grew in 2025. The fastest percentage growth came from Ogliastra on the east coast and the Sulcis in the southwest, areas known for nature, archaeology and food.

Six towns now pass one million nights a year: Alghero (1.8 million, the most visited town on the island), Arzachena (about 1.4 million), Olbia (about 1.2 million), Cagliari, Orosei and San Teodoro.

A longer season

A third of all nights now fall in April, May, September and October. Mid-season nights grew 39.2% compared with 2023, and winter nights 32.1%, although winter is still only 4% of the total. International guests drive the shoulder months: in 2023 they accounted for 71% of nights in May and 75% in October, and September had already overtaken June as the third busiest month.

BEYOND THE BEACH: CULTURE, LONGEVITY AND SLOW LUXURY

Sardinia's growth outside the peak months and outside the famous coastline rests on assets most international travellers have not yet discovered. They are also the stories that justify a longer, higher-value itinerary.

UNESCO heritage

In July 2025, UNESCO inscribed the domus de janas, prehistoric rock-cut tombs known as "fairy houses", as Italy's 61st World Heritage Site: 17 sites from Montessu in the Sulcis to Anghelu Ruju near Alghero, out of about 3,500 across the island. They join the Su Nuraxi nuraghe at Barumini, listed in 1997.

Longevity

The villages of Barbagia and Ogliastra form the world's first identified Blue Zone. In Perdasdefogu, centenarians are 13 times more common than the Italian average, and men and women reach 100 in equal numbers.

Recognition

Lonely Planet named Sardinia in its Best in Travel 2026 list, the only European destination included.

These are the experiences that make Sardinia a destination for May, June, September and October, when most of the island's visitors are international.

WHAT TO WATCH, AND WHAT IT MEANS FOR THE TRADE

Watch points

Summer concentration

CNA Sardegna warns that international demand is increasingly concentrating in the summer months, the same weeks Italians choose. That raises exposure to price pressure, capacity limits and external shocks. At Olbia, 68% of 2025 traffic fell between June and September.

Value per visitor

Arrivals are rising, but in summer 2026 Confesercenti and Confcommercio reported spending in bars, restaurants and tourist services down 20-25%, with travellers more price-conscious. Growth in volume does not automatically mean growth in value.

Infrastructure

Peak-season congestion is a recurring issue, from airport security lines in Cagliari to traffic on the Costa Smeralda.

What it means for advisors and hoteliers

01 Sell the shoulder months.

May, June, September and October deliver the island at its best, with better availability and an international crowd.

02 Look beyond the Costa Smeralda.

Ogliastra, the Sulcis, the interior and Alghero are growing fastest and offer the heritage and food stories long-haul clients want.

03 Build for the American client.

With seven weekly New York flights from 2027, US demand will keep rising. Premium cabins filled first in 2026.

04 Book peak weeks early.

With occupancy at 67% across the summer and top properties near capacity, early commitments protect the best inventory.

Nights vs arrivals

"Nights" count each night spent in accommodation; "arrivals" count guests checking in. Growth rates are not interchangeable between the two.

2026 data is provisional and partial

First-half figures come from the Alloggiati Web platform as analysed by the Region, and some sources describe the +8.24% as arrivals and others as nights. September and October figures are bookings, not final results.

Older figures

Seasonality shares (2023), yacht arrivals (2023), private aviation (2024) and the Gallura five-star hotel share are the most recent published figures found and may since have changed.
